

Risk it for a ticket

Janice has an after school job, for an hour each school day. To get to the job, she parks her moped on a P60 space on the street outside. She doesn't use the nearby parking building which charges $3 for the first two hours of parking.

Using the P60 is usually fine, but she does get held up at work 2 out of every 5 days and so overstay the allowed 60 minutes on those days. There is a 25% chance on any given day, that parking wardens are around and will write a $20 fine for cars overstaying their park.

Should Janice keep risking the P60 parking, or would she save money by using the parking building?

